Understanding the mechanism of breast cancer cell migration and metastasis to distant sites in patients is imperative in the design of strategies to control or prevent these deadly diseases. The ability to successfully incorporate cells and experimental media into the ceramic biomaterial, hydroxyapatite, is a critical first step. The aim of this study was to test the effects of various growth factors on the breast cancer cell line MCF-7 when plated on a commercial hydroxyapatite (HA) implant. MMP-9 (matrix metalloproteinase-9) activity in the supernatant was measured by an enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA), and viability was determined by the MTT colorimetric assay. Cell number and viability were maximized when the cells were plated in basal medium. The addition of either epidermal growth factor (EGF) or fibroblast growth factor (FGF-2) to the 2d92ce491b
