And what I mean is that it doesnt load properly and is just stuck on displaying the network pages. Because of what everyone says about gaming battery life of laptops. I am getting frustrated and I know I'm not the only one. I'm taking the Sager laptop my friend gives me and I was just wondering, with the exception of the wireless, would I get the same battery life with the lowest specs possible (GPU GeForce 8500M GTS, CPU i7-2600, 8 GB RAM) as I would with the very top of the line configuration? It seems weird to me. I know that's where it all goes. Even the sound card. etc. @TheOnlyJoliet I would think it would be pretty close. I have a friend who plays on newegg/walmart/ebay with a HD 5850 and a Q6600 and he gets around 8-9 hours where I stay ~2 hours with my radeon 4870 on my sager. Though I'd check out the settings, the games you play may have more control over what is going on. If you're making slow FPS drops then you'll have a better idea what to do. Product Reviews Software reviews from the community. Uploaded on Oct 04, 2006 12:01:37 PM UTC Written by'solveusee' I just installed it, everything is working fine. Kinda bugging that it won't create my own shortcuts for things though. ThanksAuthor's response: Thanks for your reply! You should try using the Create Shortcut feature of Auto Keybot, it is one of the main features that distinguishes it from similar software. I have tried it. Unfortunately the software would not add itself as a keyboard shortcut, however when I alt-tab to it or right-click the shortcut icon, it did work perfectly! I would have expected, however, that it added itself by default. I have tried it. Using a built-in application instead of one that you downloaded is one of the main focuses of Auto Keybot. When you start using such a tool, it is highly recommended to use the program developed by the company, instead of a generic solution. Good quick analysis, easy to use tool. Hopefully the shortcuts now work (hopefully both with win+key and with the separate program icon). Also, an "automate" checkbox would be useful, and the "description" box could be customizable. You know, I've been using Auto Keybot for a while now, and I really love it! It's simple, and easy to use. But, I have one problem. I was told by a friend that Auto Keybot was a bit a resource hog, because of all the background processes it was using. I'm not really worried about the windows background processes (which are the ones that actually listen for the mouse and keyboard events), and I'm fairly sure that the idle time doesn't cause any problems as well. But, I think that the time used by the process that creates the shortcuts shouldn't be a
