Specification of selectors in jQuery I am trying to understand jQuery selectors. I was following and where I came up with the following statement To select all forms having descendants with a class of 'zform' $('form.zform') Was is the purpose of giving the parent element zform? Similarly, To select all paragraphs with a class of zfield $('p.zfield') Was is the purpose of giving the parent p element zform? I guess I don't quite get what is the purpose of using parent element as a part of the selector like in 1st case and zform in 2nd case. A: Every selector is composed of three parts: selector, context, and function. The selector specifies the element or set of elements you want to select. The context specifies a set of elements that are examined to make the selector work, so that you can limit the amount of work jQuery has to do on each element. For instance, if you wanted to get the list of all li elements that were descendants of a particular ul element, you could use this selector: $('li', $('ul')); Because the ul element is already selected with a particular context when this selector is used, jQuery doesn't need to look through the list of all li elements to see if they are descendants of an ul element. In the same way, in your first example, the selector selects all forms whose descendants have a particular class. Here's another example, this time selecting p elements inside a div. This time, we want to select any paragraphs that are descendants of a particular div, but we don't want to look through the entire document to find the element

Australia's major banks, as well as the country's central bank, have failed to provide even the most basic of financial risk reports on cryptocurrencies, according to a new report by the Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC). The failure to file reports is in direct contrast to the country's banks, which have engaged in ongoing dialogue with the regulator in order to continue working with cryptocurrency exchanges and providing correspondent banking services to the industry. The alarming report, published last week, finds that all major banks in Australia — including ANZ, the Commonwealth Bank of Australia (CBA) and the National Australia Bank (NAB)
