Atypical pulmonary involvement in a case of MuSK antibody positive myasthenia gravis. This report describes the case of a 25-year-old woman with the rare complication of myasthenia gravis with pulmonary involvement, whose lung function tests revealed an obstructive disorder. The patient had a history of thymoma and thymectomy. However, there was no improvement in the myasthenia gravis with medical treatment. The diagnosis of myasthenia gravis was confirmed by a positive acetylcholine receptor antibody test. Physical and computed tomography (CT) scanning revealed hyperinflation and pulmonary fibrosis. Arterial blood gas analysis showed hypoxemia in the lung but was consistent with respiratory failure. A video-assisted thoracoscopic surgery showed the presence of multiple nodules in the upper lobes of both lungs. As myasthenia gravis is a rare disorder, it is difficult to find a definitive histological diagnosis of the lesions. The main differential diagnosis of atypical pulmonary involvement in myasthenia gravis is idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis, from which the patient presented with a relatively nonspecific set of signs and symptoms. Although a definitive diagnosis of myasthenia gravis is important in that it may require treatment, that alone is not sufficient in this particular case. Determination of the number of components in the pharmacokinetics of benzodiazepines. The number of components in the pharmacokinetics of benzodiazepines was determined by independent methods. 3-Fluorocycloxyridinol (3-FOCP) was synthesized and determined as benzodiazepine by gas chromatography in conventional and high resolution electron-capture-detection mode. The presence
