customers as a free download. Upgrades can be purchased on a monthly basis.An expansion of the Applicant's Phase I SBIR proposal to convert a computer-based counting and point-of-care screening tool into a fully-automated, handheld device is proposed. It will be evaluated for point-of-care emergency management use by the U.S. Coast Guard in the International Maritime Emergency Managemant Program (IMEMP). The IMEMP Director has requested this device in order to detect hemoconcentration (high blood viscosity) in its rapidly-deploying MAREPS [Marine Air Response, Emergency Planning, and Rescue Procedures] units. Currently, hemoconcentration can be assessed only by taking a finger-prick blood sample to determine blood viscosity. Hemoconcentration leads to high (arterial) blood pressure and can cause organ damage. But it is easily-diagnosed and treated. Therefore, being able to detect high blood viscosity (hemoconcentration) in the field or at sea is important to identify the distress signal to enable responsive and more effective emergency management activities for the vessel and its crew. The device will provide information about whether a "global emergency" has occurred, as defined in the International Maritime Organization's Serious Accident Rules (SAR). Detecting global emergencies could greatly reduce hours of wasted or inefficient search and rescue efforts. The device could be used for pre-hospital (transport emergency medical services) and hospital emergency management. CHONDRIA (Crystalline Structural Hemo-Viscosity Imaging) Technology produces high resolution (600 dpi, 40[unreadable]) imaging that is suitable for point of care use. A prototype of the new device, which will be capable of measuring blood viscosity with excellent repeatability and high sensitivity, is being developed for the Phase I submission. 545 So.2d 1323 (1989) William Ray HARRIS v. Price: $50.00, Free Trial : 30 days, License: Shareware (Free to Try) Date Added: Download Size: 1.10 MB, Company Name: InFlow Canada Talend Server Talend Server is an open source NoSQL database server built on top of the Talend open source data integration platform. The server is designed to provide a single easy to use API that enables developers to access high-throughput data stores in a highly scalable way. With Talend Server installed and running on your machine, you can add data sources via a simple drag and drop interface, as well as create projects, tasks, pipeline components, jobs and run jobs locally or remotely, all with the help of one interface. Moreover, the server is integrated with Talend Workbench, thus allowing you to connect to the databases directly using their ODBC interfaces, or even implement a Talend Transformation Job. Talend Server Features: Simplicity: Talend Server is designed to be easy to set up and use, with a simple drag and drop interface, and having a configuration wizard to guide you through the process of setting up a new connection. It is also possible to use a Data Source Factory to run a set of steps on each connection, based on Data Sources. Jobs: The Talend Server comes integrated with the Talend Job Engine, which helps you build and schedule jobs, and run them in your environment. This can be very useful, as it provides a simple, yet powerful and flexible interface. Publishable: Talend Server is available as both a server and as a web based app, which means that you can run it both locally and remotely. You can publish it both as a local endpoint and as a web server. In this way, you can add it to your existing server infrastructure, thus making it easier to use. Permissions: Talend Server is designed to allow you to have a fine control over what applications are allowed to access your data. It is possible to define permissions for each data source, or simply give access to your whole account. Data Sourcing: It is very easy to use Talend Server, as it comes integrated with the Talend Integration Framework (TIF), which means that it is possible to add data sources in a very intuitive way, just by dragging and dropping them into a design, or using the provided wizard to create them automatically. Data Integration: Talend Server is designed to provide an API that is very
